The new internet-based services of the Hungarian National Museum

Networkshop 2007

Abstract

In 2005, I delivered a lecture on the web pages of museums, and I introduced the Museums plans. It has taken almost two years to renew the Hungarian National Museum's web page and the webpage of Kölyökmúzeum (Kids' Museum), since we deviated from our original plan: it was expanded by new function, and the uploaded materials were much more broader than the planned ones. It was how the present complex information system including pages to visitors as well as pages to scientists took shape.

The Museum has always placed emphasis on bringing handicapped people closer to the Museum, so the Museum established a unique service for those people through its webpage. The second part of my lecture deals with the Kölyökmúzeum, it outlines the renewal of the home page, the experience we gathered during the works. The Museum's ambition is to be a guide to the Hungarian museums on how to create and operate modern, internet-based services.
